FOREWORD

1. The Making of this book

In the early 1980s, a group of history students met once in a while in the cafeteria of the Württemberg State Library to discuss actual matters. Some of these folks afterwards went to the reading room in order to study or gather material for their works. One of them turned the pages of old newspapers and copied everything about papermaking, another one coped with military history.

At that time, a complete copy of the Schwäbischer Merkur and Schwäbische Chronik newspapers (1785 – 1941) was placed in the reading room, on a shelf which reached up to the ceiling. While curiously turning the pages, I discovered many entries about emigrants and absent persons. It was exactly the period when many Americans wrote to Germany in order to learn the origins of their emigrant ancestors, and here in this newspapers were thousands of references for those ancestors. As it was not feasible to search through to whole papers for each inquiry, I started to copy the findings on file cards and sort them into one alphabet with my card file of searched emigrants. The success was very small.

In the course of time, it seemed advisable to edit the findings in print – not just for those who were denoted as emigrants, but for all persons who appeared being absent as they may have emigrated into some direction as well. An evaluation of further years up to 1815 finally yielded a stock of 41,930 references. Many of these entries originated from the attempt of the Württemberg authorities to draw absent natives into the Württemberg army<sup>1</sup>.

It was soon intended to publish those lists in English language because this language is being understood by the majority of the readers and because books in German language were not accepted in America – at that time the main market for such a publication. And anyway, German-speaking persons can read the advertisements in the original text.

A completely-corrected database in English language was finished by 1991. Due to other duties, publication was delayed until now. Other reasons of such a delay were the limited power of the personal computers at that time and the complicated compilation of the index of place names. So it took more than 30 years to finally complete the project.

In the time before 1803, southwest Germany consisted of a multitude of territories of very different size. The local officials could decide if they would insert their public notifications in said two newspapers, in other papers or nowhere<sup>2</sup>. So the two evaluated papers contain many advertisements from a number of dominions for the time before 1803, but none from other dominions. In the years from 1803 to 1806, the small and medium-size territories were swallowed by the large ones, so at the end, only Baden, Württemberg, Bavaria and the two Hohenzollern principalities were left. Württemberg was still in 1807 divided into 140 districts, from 1808 onwards there were only 65<sup>3</sup>. After the exchange of districts with some neighbour territories, the borders were by 1810 determined for the next 150 years.

2. Public announcements by district authorities in Southwest Germany

By the late eighteenth century, persons who were absent were sought via advertisements in newspapers and intelligencers in the Duchy of Württemberg<sup>4</sup> and in other dominions. The officials in the district offices, the district courts and the community offices could decide themselves where they wanted to have their notifications published. Possible media were, besides the Schwäbischer Merkur and the Chronik, the government gazette (Regierungsblatt) established in 1807, and the local newspapers. Gathering all official emigrations would require to evaluate all those papers, all together a very extended enterprise which will fail at least from the fact that many of the local newspapers have not been completely preserved.

Extracting information from all these papers would obviously yield frequent repetitions, as multiple insertions of a particular advertisement would lead to multiple abstracts. If, however, information-extraction is limited to just one type of media, such as the Schwäbischer Merkur and the Chronik, many advertisements would be missing which the authorities wanted to see appear in other localities.

In the period of investigation (1785 – 1815), the following periodicals were available for such announcements (the list indicates the place of publication, the year of first appearance and the title of the paper)<sup>5</sup>:

A. Papers serving a larger region, such as the Duchy and later on the Kingdom of Württemberg:

Stuttgart	1785	Schwäbischer Merkur, Schwäbische Chronik
Stuttgart	~1700	Stuttgardische Zeitung, from 1831 Stuttgarter Zeitung
Stuttgart	1807	Königlich württembergisches Staats- und Regierungsblatt; the low-echelon announcements are in an attachment by the name Intelligenz-Blatt (partially bound separately).

VORWORT

1. Die Vorgeschichte dieses Buches.

In den frühen 1980er Jahren traf sich ein Kreis von Geschichtsstudenten mitunter zu informativen Gesprächen in der Cafeteria der Württembergischen Landesbibliothek. Manche gingen anschließend noch in den Lesesaal, um zu lernen oder Material für ihre Arbeiten zu sammeln. Einer sah alte Zeitungen durch und schrieb alles zum Thema Papierherstellung heraus, ein anderer befaßte sich mit Militärgeschichte.

Im Lesesaal befand sich damals noch ein vollständiges Exemplar des Schwäbischen Merkur (von 1785 bis 1941), das ein ganzes Regal bis zur Decke füllte. Beim neugierigen Blättern entdeckte ich darin zahlreiche Einträge über Auswanderer und Abwesende. Gerade zu dieser Zeit schrieben viele Amerikaner nach Deutschland, um die genaue Herkunft ihrer ausgewanderten Vorfahren zu erfahren, und hier, in dieser Zeitung, waren tausende von Nachweisen dazu. Da man nicht für jede Anfrage die ganzen Zeitungen durchsehen konnte, begann ich, die Funde auf Karteikarten zu übertragen und diese mit den Karten der gesuchten Auswanderer zu mischen. Der Erfolg war bescheiden.

Mit der Zeit schien es ratsamer, die Funde in Druck herauszugeben – nicht nur die Auswanderer, sondern alle als abwesend bezeichneten Personen, da auch diese in irgend eine Richtung ausgewandert sein konnten. Die Durchsicht weiterer Jahrgänge bis 1815 ergab schließlich einen Bestand von 41 930 Nachweisen. Ein großer Teil davon entfiel auf die behördlichen Versuche, abwesende Landeskinder für die württembergische Armee zu rekrutieren<sup>25</sup>.

Von vornherein bestand die Absicht, die Listen in englischer Sprache zu veröffentlichen, weil diese von der Mehrzahl der Leser verstanden wird und weil Bücher in deutscher Sprache in Amerika – damals der Hauptmarkt für eine solche Publikation – nicht angenommen werden. Außerdem können deutsche Interessenten die Anzeigen ja im Original nachlesen.

Im Jahr 1991 lag schließlich ein durchkorrigierter Datensatz in englischer Sprache vor. Aufgrund anderweitiger Verpflichtungen verzögerte sich die Fertigstellung bis heute. Weitere Gründe waren die eingeschränkte Leistungsfähigkeit der damaligen Computer und die komplizierte Erstellung des Ortsregisters. So dauerte es mehr als 30 Jahre, um das Projekt endlich abzuschließen.

2. Das südwestdeutsche niedergerichtliche Verkündigungswesen.

Im Herzogtum Württemberg und in anderen Herrschaften wurden Abwesende bereits im späten 18. Jhd. durch Anzeigen in Zeitungen und Intelligenzblättern gesucht<sup>28</sup>. Die Beamten in den Oberämtern, den Amtsgerichten und den Gemeindebehörden konnten selbst entscheiden, wo sie ihre Bekanntmachungen veröffentlichten. Neben dem Schwäbischen Merkur samt Chronik kamen das Regierungsblatt (ab 1807) und die örtlichen Zeitungen in Frage. Um alle förmlichen Auswanderungen zu erfassen, müßte man also auch alle diese Blätter auswerten, insgesamt ein sehr umfangreiches Unterfangen, das schon daran scheitert, daß viele der betreffenden örtlichen Zeitungen für die Zeit vor 1815 gar nicht mehr vollständig vorhanden sind.

Bei einer Auswertung aller dieser Blätter ergäbe sich natürlich eine gewaltige Redundanz, weil die mehrfach geschalteten Anzeigen letzten Endes auch mehrfach erfaßt werden. Bei einer Beschränkung auf eine einzige Art von Medien, z. B. die Wochenblätter und Tageszeitungen, fehlen notwendigerweise zahlreiche Anzeigen, die die Behörden nur an anderen Stellen eingereicht haben wollten.
